

October 2024 Admission Information
Entrance Examination for Third-Year Transfer Students Seeking Admission to the School of Japan Studies
TYPE B
(General Admission/Additional Recruitment)

■ Admission Policy

The undergraduate programs at TUFSS offer a basic grounding in a range of academic disciplines related to the world's languages, cultures, and societies, as well as in fields offering an interdisciplinary perspective on diverse international problems and issues.

TUFSS seeks students who have completed a comprehensive high school education in Japan or abroad, are able to think critically, make informed decisions, and express themselves articulately, have inquiring minds and a thirst for knowledge, share the University's mission, and are eager to work together with people of diverse cultural backgrounds to address global problems and issues.

The School of Japan Studies welcomes individuals seeking to study Japan from an international perspective, become global leaders with a deep understanding of Japanese language and culture, and contribute to the advancement of multilingual and multicultural societies in Japan and elsewhere.

Our graduates go on to work in global corporations, Japanese companies seeking to expand globally, municipal, national, and international organizations, interpreting and translation, tourism and transport, publishing, mass media, educational and research institutions involved in teaching Japanese language and culture, and as junior and senior high school Japanese language teachers. Students may also elect to continue their studies in graduate school and pursue careers in research.

■ Features

The School of Japan Studies offers the opportunity to study and discover Japan from a multi-disciplinary, international perspective. Each cohort is comprised of students from around the world. Entrants have the opportunity to learn and share ideas with students from a diverse array of linguistic and cultural backgrounds.

Intensive multi-lingual, intercultural exchange enables students to develop the innovative problem-solving skills required to succeed both in a rapidly internationalizing Japan and increasingly globalized world.

As relations between Japan and the world deepen, there is increasing demand, in both the corporate world and academia, for individuals who can connect Japan with the rest of the world.

Each year, the School of Japan Studies invites 10 applicants to enter the school as third-year students (第3年次編入学生 Sannenji Hennyugakusei). There are two paths to admission, Type A and Type B. Type A is reserved for 3 applicants from TUFS' partner institutions.(*). whereas Type B is intended for 7 applicants who, regardless of nationality, received a majority of their schooling outside the Japanese education system.

This program opens a new path of study for those seeking to contribute to Japan's internationalization by engaging with local society, contributing to mutual understanding between their country and Japan, and working to strengthen relations between their country and Japan after completing their study and returning home. After gaining admission to the School of Japan Studies, students are required to select a specialized field of study and faculty member to serve as their advisor. During the fourth year, they are required to complete a graduate thesis or equivalent research project.
